Biography Andrea Murray-Lichtman

Andrea Murray-Lichtman, MSW, LCSW is a licensed clinical therapist. She is a faculty member at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Andrea is also currently pursuing her doctorate through an international program at Memorial University of Newfoundland in Canada. She desires to gain an international perspective of research on health and wellness. Her areas of interest include spirituality and mental wellness, social justice, cultural humility, and pedagogy that enhances access to services for marginalized populations. Prior to joining the faculty at UNC, Andrea served as clinical faculty at Duke University Medical Center providing individual and group psychotherapy to diverse individuals living with comorbid health, substance use, and mental health issues. She served as clinical director of a local community behavioral health program and currently owns a private practice. Andrea has facilitated national and local workshops on a range of topics, including emotional and spiritual health. She believes that faith can inform wellness. She currently takes a lead role in providing community pro bono mental health services through her local church's faith-based mental health organization. She also serves as a deaconess in the church congregation.
